and dashed madly forward. Nature turned me to-

Every half minute an alternate yelp from my ferocious followers told me too certain that they were in close pursuit. Nearer and nearer they came / I heard their feet pattering on the ice still nearer, until I could feel their breath and hear their snuffling scent. Every nerve and muscle in my frame was stritched to the utmost tension. The trees along the shere seemed to dance in the uncertain light, and my bain turnd with my own breathless speed, yet they stil ed to hiss forth their breath with a sound tuly horrible, when an involuntary motion on my prt turned me out of my course. The wolves, close able to stop, and as unable to turn on the mooth ice, slipped and fell, still going on far a head; their tongues were lolling out, their white tusks, glaring from their bloody mouths, their dark, shaggy breasts fere fleeced with foam, and as they passed me their ces glared,

At one time, by delaying my turning 'oo long, my sanguinary antagonists came so near that they threw the white foam over my dress as they spring to seize me, and their teeth clashed together like the spring of Had my skates failed for one instant, had I tripped

But I soon came opposite the house, and myhounds -I knew their deep voices-roused by the noise, bayed furiously from the kennels. I heard their chains rattle; how I wished they would break them! and then I would have protectors that would be peer to the fiercest denizens of the forest. The wolves, taking the hint conveyed by the dogs, stopped in their mad career, and after a moment's consideration, turned and fled. I watched them until their dusky forms disaps peared over a neighboring hill. Then taking off my skates, wended my way to the house, with feelings which may be better imagined than described. But even yet I never see a broad sheet of ice in the moonshine, without thinking of the snuffing breath, and those fearful things that followed me so closely down the frozen Kennebec-Musical Furniture .- " No. Mrs. Brown," replied Mr Smith. "we have n't." "You are quite right we have no piano in the house." "Why, that's odd, Mr. Smith." "Perhaps so, madam-but we can't afford to have a piano." "Dear me !- is that the reason, Mr. Smith ?" "The money is not much, madam-but there are other considerations. In the first place, madam, I am a nervous man, and hate discordant noises of every kind. To be sure, I contrive to endure the crying of the baby, because that is inevitable, and not a conventional nuisance that one can be rid of at will. But musical furniture, to be manipulated for disagreeable sounds, with malice aforethought, as the lawyers say-that is a different thing, and one there is no apology for. Besides, madam, there is another reason why we don't keep a piano. Mrs. Smith can't afford to compromise her present standing among people of true gentility by complying with vulgar customs; and nothing is more thoroughly vulgar, madam, than a pretence of music. (or of any other accomplishment, indeed,) when one has no gift that way. Mrs. Smith knows her deficiency, and does not seek to remedy it by false pretences-which deceive nobody. To excel in an ornamental art, is undoubtedly an accomplisha ment:' to torture either the Muses or the Graces with ignorance and inaptitude is only to make ourself a subject for ridicule. Mrs Smith can't afford it." Mrs. Smith "concurred with the other branch," and Mrs. Brown departed.

A Skater Chased by a Wolf. A thrilling incident in American country life is vividly sketched in "Evenings at Donaldson's Manor." In the winter of 1844 the relator sallied forth one evening to skate on the Kennebeck, in Maine, by moon-turned into a little stream to explore its source. He Fir and hemlock of a century's growth met over head, and formed an archway, radiant with frost work. All was dark within; but I was young and fearless ; and as I reered into an unbroken forest that reared itself on the borders of the stream, I laughed with very joyousness; my wild hurrah rang through the silent woods, and I stood listening to the echo that reverber-

Suddenly a sound arose, it seemed to me to come from beneath the ice; it sounded low and tremulous at first, until it ended in a low, wild yell. I was appalled. Never before had such a noise met my ears. thought it more than mortal: so fierce, and amidst such an unbroken solitude, it seemed as though from the tread of some brute animal, and the blood rushed back to my forehead with a bound that made my skin burn, and I felt relieved that I had to contend with things earthly and not spiritual; my energies returned; and I looked around me for some means of escape .as I turned my head to the shore, I could see two dark objects dashing through the underbrush at a pace neafly double in speed to my own. By this rapidity, and the short yells they occasionally gave, I knew at once description given of them, I had very little pleasure iff making their acquaintance. Their untameable fierceness, and the unerring strength which seems part of their nature, render them objects of dread to every benighted traveler. There was no time for thought; so I bent my head wards home. The light flashes of snow spun from the iron on my skates, and I was some distance from my pursuers, whence their fierce howl told me I was their fugitive. I did not look back : I did not feel afraid or sorry, or even glad; one thought of home, of the bright faces awaiting my return, of their tears if they should never see me again, and then every energy of body and mind was exerted for escape. I was perfectly at home on the ice. Many were the days that I had spent on my good skates, never thinking that at one time they would be my only means of safe. I thought all the chances over; I knew when they would take hold of me if I fell; I thought low long it would be before I died; and then there would be a search for the body that would already have its tomb !
